

Abstract

On Labels that Lie: two case studies in caution and connection

This paper dissects two instruments—one from an Israeli private collection, and one at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum—with unusual labels of provenance and ownership. In order to untangle the intentionally obfuscated histories of the instrument, genealogical research proved crucial to collecting the surprising memories of descendants.